Typical November weather has been the rule throughout the week at Salford, and on two or three mornings the racecourse at Castle Irwell has been enveloped in a dones fog. It was not so bad to-day, but the light was very indifferent and the going sticky. Rain tomorrow would render the ground decidelly beavy. For the November Handicap the following may see the starting post:—

discourage patriotism and deceive our friends by the ridiculous secrecies of our censorship. Lord Northeliffe declines to surrender his independence to a Government which has suffered such conditions to exist for many months.

Lord Northeliffe has been an honest and fearless critic—though not invariably a just critic—of the conduct of the war. He has put his splendid gifts of organisation at his country's service, and has laid it under a load of gratitude to him by the success of his mission to the United States. The whole Empire has come to regard this brilliant Irishman as a spokesman of the national will to victory in the war and of the national will to victory in the war and of the national will to victory in the war and of the national will to victory in the war and of the national will to victory in the war and of the national will to victory in the war and of the national readiness to make all necessary sacrifices. His letter will make a profound impression on the Government. Lord Northeliff gives it fair warning. We were patient of "wobbling"—it is his own word—in peace-time, but we are thoroughly sick of it in the fourth year of the most terrible war in history. It is intolerable that "pacificisis" should still be fed by German gold in England; that we have not yet achieved unity of war control with our Allies; that even under conscription in Great Britain the Government still hesitates to enlist every available man for the Army; that it is still afraid to tackle seriously the increasing problem of food shortage. Upon an amendment moved by Pringle that no member of the Air Cou should be practically interested in undertaking which supplied acceptance engines, the Chancellor of the Exche pointed out that the proposal obviously aimed at one man, Sir Will Weir, who was, he said, the life and of the supply department. He held undreds of thousands of strong, young ivilians. A large proportion of this fine utilitary material is so disaffected (because military material is so disancted (occause so idle and so carefully indoctrinated by our own Executive with scorn of British law) that it keeps in Ireland not only itself, but 50,000 trained soldiers who should be helping to turn the fortunes of the battle of the Piave. the Army; that it is still afraid to tackle seriously the increasing problem of food shortage. Lord Northcliffe does not mention—perhaps, was not thinking about—Ireland; but loyal men in this country have special reason to welcome his protest. Instead of mere "pacificism," as in England, we have rampant pro-Germanism. The law, still respected in England, is held here in utter contempt. Jobbery and extravagance are more flagrant in Ireland to-day than before the murders at Sarajevo. At a moment when the Army is in bitter need of men we have in Ireland to tackle seriously the increasing problem of food shortage. Lord Northcliffe does not mention—to be used as a substitute for Carnauba wax for gramaphone records, polishes, and candles. Nyasaland tobacco, Rhodesian oil-seeds, and Egyptian drugs are all being tested and developed. Many of these put forward was supported by speed whilly unnecessary length. The lamber in the commercial spirit which has been so admirably developed here during the past few years must observe everything. > Admiral Lord Beresford, G.C.B., Colonel John Ward, M.P.,

A MID all the havoc and pity of the war one thing shines out like a torch in the night, the splendid comradeship of officers and men. That this precious treasure should be dissipated would be a national calamity. Upon it must be built a greater and a finer Britain: a dignified and lasting order instead of disruption and discontent. To a dignified and lasting order instead of disruption and discontent. To this noble end "Comrades of the Great War" has been founded, by the fighting men themselves. The objects of "Comrades of the Great War" are: to perpetuate the memory of glorious deeds; to bind man to man, above all to cheer the lonely, to comfort the sorrowful, to help the widow and the orphan of the heroic dead. The blind men, the maimed men, the shattered men, the isolated ones, the neglected ones. the isolated ones, the neglected ones—these are the sailors and soldiers, whether officers or men, whom "Comrades of the Great War" will

One night, before an attack, an officer and a private were watching the splendid affection A and comradeship beGreat Idea tween officers and men. Born on Every man of that Batthe talion was ready to "lay Battlefield. down his life for his friend." Touched by the scene the officer said to the private: "What a tragic pity it would be if these fellows should lose sight of each other after the war—if all this magnificent friendship should go to waste. Is there no way by which we can perpetuate this comradeship for our country's sake?" And amid the roar of the guns officer and man determined to found a great League which should bind together for life all who have fought for Britain.
